You invest in technology for two basic reasons:

Cost savings

- Use of appropriate technology for your business.
- Increasing automation so business growth requires less staffing.
- Getting the most from your outside vendors.
- Ensuring high availability of your current environment.
- Ensuring your network and systems are secure from threats (SPAM, Viruses, Intrusion).

Improve productivity

- Well trained employees are more productive and make better use of the tools you supply.
- Increased automation enables your current customers to manage orders themselves, freeing sales people to focus on new business.
- Effectively administered systems save time/money through automated software distribution, appropriate security mechanisms and consistency.

Common technical problems in Business

Most businesses are not in the business of technology. Hence, technology is a tool to meet your business needs.

- Technical Management expertise can free up your time to manage your business.
- Investigation of appropriate technology can consume huge amounts of time for managers not versed in technology.
- Providing technology expertise on your management team provides one-stop answers to questions and solutions for issues.
- Many businesses use a variety of technical vendors many times with overlapping services.
- Vendors do not always deliver all the features/services you have contracted for.
- Many times feature/function from one vendor must be sacrificed to accommodate feature/function from another. Sorting through these capabilities is difficult for non-technical managers.
- Leveraging vendor relationships with your business peers can save money.
